PATTERN WORD LIST

Based on the “Phoenix” English word list
(<http://www.cryptogram.org/downloads/words/dict.new.zip>)

arranged by prevalence of each word, as counted in the Google Books n-gram raw data set

How to Use the "Ranked" Pattern Word List

By DARING FLAIR

Determining Word Pattern

This pattern word list assigns a pattern letter for each letter in the word, starting with "A" for the first letter and proceeding with subsequent pattern letters for each unique plaintext letter in alphabetical order. Using this method, the word "apprentice" has the pattern ABBCDEFGHD. Pattern letters B and D show up twice each, to represent the location of the repeated letters p and e. This method produces a larger file, but is more complete (it includes words without any repeating letters, for example) and seems more intuitive to use.

Strengths and Weaknesses of Pattern Word Lists

The key strength of pattern word lists is that longer words typically have more unique patterns. A single long pattern word may have only one or two English matches, and can provide many plaintext letters towards the ultimate solution. For example, the third cipher word "FRARYRCII" in MJ2016 A-25 has only two matches to its pattern ABCBDBEFF - "civilizee" and "maharane" (the correct word). Cipher word "RVVIQUFRRQ" (pattern ABBCDEF AAD) from MJ2016 A-22 also had only two matches - "foodstuffs" and "feedstuffs" - which are identical save for one substitution. Both of these examples show how a rapid entry can be made towards solving a tricky Aristo if a unique pattern can be exploited.

However, many patterns have very long lists of matching words. The worst-case scenario is a word with all unique letters, yielding a pattern such as ABCDEF (10,982 matches), ABCDEFG (11,265 matches) or ABCDEFGH (8,569 matches).

Cipher MJ2016 A-23 appears to be relatively resistant to pattern word analysis. All of the long words have few or no duplicate letters and many matching patterns for each word. The best candidate for pattern word matching appears to be "SONLMPL" (pattern ABCDEFD), with 597 possible English word matches. For those of us using a pattern word list as a manual solution aid, there are too many words that could match the pattern to be useful. As one starts to read the list of words matching the pattern ABCDEFD - aborter, absence, abusers, etc. - it's inevitable to wish for a better way to find the needle in the haystack.

The "Ranked" Pattern Word List

Peter Norvig, Director of Research at Google, has published many articles on his personal site (www.norvig.com) that discuss technology, programming, and humor. His article, "English Language Frequency Counts: Mayzner Revisited", describes his effort to reproduce Mark Mayzner's 1965 research effort to produce English-language frequency tables based on word length and letter position. Mayzner, using Hollerith punch cards, collected 20,000 words from 100 separate sources, with one card used for each three, four, five, six and seven-letter word. (Longer and shorter words were excluded from his analysis.) Norvig used the entire Google Books collection - a data set 37 million times larger than Mayzner's - and tabulated frequencies for all words found in all of the books in that database. His results are fascinating (and largely corroborate the Mayzner effort), but one by-product of his work was a list of English words and their number of occurrences in the Google Books corpus. This value ranges from 100,000 ("westergaard") to 53 billion ("the"). (Words appearing fewer than 100,000 times were omitted from this list.)

I wrote a program to add the Google Books corpus word occurrence count to each word in my pattern word list and sorted them such that the most frequently used words would rise to the top. The result was this "ranked" pattern word list that allows the user to see the most likely pattern matches, assuming the plaintext has word usage frequencies similar to typical English publications.

The ranked pattern word list demonstrates its value when applied to the prior example from MJ-2016 A-23. The correct match, "distant", is the tenth entry in the ranked pattern word list. If the list is sorted alphabetically, "distant" appears as the 139th option to try. The haystack isn't any smaller, but the needles should now rise to the top!

Tips and Tricks

With more than four thousand pages, I do not recommend printing this file. The list is sorted alphabetically by pattern. To quickly find the pattern you are looking for, hit CTRL-F on your keyboard and enter "Pattern: <pattern>" into the pop-up box (without the quotation marks, and replacing <pattern> with the pattern you wish to find). Ensure that one space is entered after the colon. Searching just for ABCD will direct you to AABCD, ABABCD, ABBABCD, etc. before ABCD is found. Each plaintext word is followed by a count of how many times that word was found in the Google Books corpus. I used metric suffixes to keep the numbers short, so "53.2G" would indicate that a word was found 53.2 billion times, and "0.9M" would mean that the word was found 0.9 million (or nine hundred thousand) times. The source data for this effort only included words that appeared at least one hundred thousand times (denoted by 0.1M), so words that appeared in my original English word list but not in the Google word list were presumed to occur less frequently. These words have been marked with occurrence totals of 0.0M - whether they occurred ninety-nine thousand times, or nine times.

Why the Red Border?

I keep a copy of this file on my iPhone for solving use anywhere! The problem I ran into was that I couldn't quickly distinguish this file by its thumbnail from an array of other similar documents. So I've added a red border to make it easier to find. Other reference documents I make have different border colors.
